Challenge Program

From homelessness to high school diploma; LeiLei is a young lady who has overcome many obstacles and is a wonderful participant in the Challenge Program. From August 2019 - March 2020, she has had many accomplishments. Before enrollment, she was in need of her HSD or GED, a full-time job, a driver's license, and housing assistance. While in the program, she was dealing with family issues that caused stress in many areas of her life. LeiLei continued to stay focused and work towards the goals she set. She was offered many elements that were outlined in her ISS; tutoring, study skills, education services, supportive services, and job shadowing that was completed at Bellevue Community Garden. LeiLei was an incredibly hardworking woman who was able to accomplish her goals in a timely manner. She obtained her driver's license, forklift and flagger certification, her high school diploma, and also reopened her bank account and started developing a savings account. Soon after obtaining her high school diploma, LeiLei submitted an application to Wilmington University and was accepted into their College of Business. She is currently working at the Bellevue Community Center as agardner where she continues to learn how to maintain an urban garden. She has an interest in creating her own natural skincare products and is learning what herbs are good for our bodies. Challenge Program staff continues to make monthly contact with her to see if she is in need of assistance. She is always welcome here at the Challenge Program and has shown us, and others, that one can accomplish their goals despite setbacks that may arise.

Building Sustainable Apprenticeships: The Case of Apprenticeship 2000. This brief released by the Urban Institute examines the success of a sustainable industry consortium model that has been replicated in a number of US communities. For employers, the consortium offers cost-effective mechanisms for developing apprenticeships into an enduring talent development strategy. For apprentices, they offer rigorous, high-quality career pathways that start with work experience and occupational skills and lead to rewarding careers. For educators (or educational institutions), they offer sufficient scale and close connection between the academic content of apprenticeships and current and future employer needs.

YouthBuild Work Experience. This paper explains why quality work experiences matter, to define the attributes of quality work experiences for DOL YouthBuild participants, and to provide strategies and promising practices on how programs can connect with partners to provide quality work experiences for their participants.

Connecting Opportunity Youth and Employers through Work-Based Learning. This paper released by YouthBuild USA describes the importance of Work-based learning (WBL) through illuminating best practices learned from YouthBuild program sites that participated in the YouthBuild High-Demand Career Pathways Program, an initiative supported by the Citi Foundation. In addition, this resource defined the elements and continuum of WBL, with a focus on the strategies, practices, and partnerships that programs developed.

Digital Summer Youth Employment Toolkit 2.0. This resource released by the Aspen Institute Forum for Community Solutions builds on the initial toolkit from June 2020, and is informed by implementation lessons from 2020's "summer like no other" from communities across the Opportunity Youth Forum (OYF) network and national partners.

2019 School Enrollment Tables. This resource released by the U.S. Census Bureau examines the characteristics of people enrolled in school at all levels using statistics from the Current Population Survey. These data were gathered before the COVID-19 pandemic and serve as a pre-crisis benchmark for future research and planning.

Linking College Majors to Careers. This resource published by the Bureau of Labor Statistics provides understanding which college academic majors connect to which careers.

Unpacking the Work of Work-Based Learning. This research report describes how four organizations involved with the Annie E. Casey Foundation's Generation Work initiative engage with young adults and employers to design and manage work-based learning opportunities.

Stabilizing Young People Transitioning to Adulthood. This synthesis brief released by the Urban Institute builds on five separate briefs examining key safety net programs and explores the extent to which key federal safety net programs help meet young people's basic needs for housing, food, health care, and income during this transitional life stage. It also presents findings from an initial exploration of issues relevant to young people, based on a quick review of literature and conversations with safety net and youth policy experts as well as youth-serving practitioners.

O*NET Resource Center Shares Features Added to the O*NET Interest Profiler Score Report and Career Listings. The O*NET Interest Profiler within My Next Move and Mi Próximo Paso is now enhanced to include share options for its score report and career listings. This effort was in response to teachers reaching out to let us know they need an easy way for their students to share with them their O*NET Interest Profiler results remotely. Remote classroom instruction is a growing trend and reality during the COVID pandemic, and the O*NET Program strives to help teachers with the challenge of implementing career exploration in a distance learning environment. The new feature allows students to share their results directly via email or to use "Copy link" to paste a link to their report into a document, email, or other system (e.g., Seesaw, Blackboard Collaborate, or Google Meet). In addition, individuals will be able to seamlessly share their O*NET Interest Profiler results to a variety of social media platforms, including Facebook, Twitter, and Reddit.
