Many communities still struggle with effectively integrating business services across education and workforce and economic development. As a result, we're still approaching businesses and their talent needs in silos and only reaching a small share of them regionally. Now, however, we have identified a specific set of promising practices that appear to be working.

Learn from state and regional peers across the U.S. and how they have integrated their business outreach and services with partner agencies to provide a unified business service strategy to businesses. Take advantage of a new integrated business services-developed by your peers-that can be used to help advance your own work.
